News update from IDRI, the Infectious Disease Research Institute

INTRODUCING IDRI'S 2014 ANNUAL REPORT

Each year, IDRI offers our community of donors, supporters and partners a report on our progress through the past year and a look to the future.

Up-and-coming scientists Quinton Dowling and Lucien Barnes are profiled in IDRI's annual report, demonstrating our commitment to training.

We invite you to read our 2014 Annual Report, where you'll learn about our focus on transferring our technology into countries where the infectious disease burden is highest to enable in-country development and production.

Nearly 150 Travel the World with IDRI

It's not that often that you get a chance to virtually "travel" the world in the course of a few hours, while also hearing from leading infectious disease experts.

The second annual "Around the World with IDRI" Celebration on Oct. 16 featured food, drink and entertainment from India, South Africa and Brazil, with IDRI scientists discussing our work in those countries. And our expert panel of global health leaders, including

Steve Reed, Frank Prendergast and Bruce Carter led a discussion focused on emerging, as well as age-old, infectious diseases. Read more.

IDRI WINS GLOBAL HEALTH AWARD

Tanya Parish and Rob Lin proudly display IDRI's award as top Global Health Organization.

And the award goes to ... IDRI!

IDRI was honored to be named as the recipient of the inaugural Outstanding Global Health Organization by the Washington Global Health Alliance earlier this month.

The award, voted on a panel of global health leaders, recognizes a Washington state-based organization making an "exceptional impact on improving global health equity." Read more.
